

B.1 [関係代名詞の as]

Of the total energy produced on Earth since the industrial revolution began, half has been consumed in the last twenty years. Disproportionately it was consumed by us in the rich world; we are an exceedingly privileged fraction.

Today it takes the average citizen of Tanzania almost a year to produce the same volume of carbon emissions as is effortlessly generated every two and a half days by a European, or every twenty-eight hours by an American. We are, in short, able to live as we do because we use resources at hundreds of times the rate of most of the planet's other citizens. (大阪大'15)

B.2 [all SV~]

Merely stating a proposal by no means requires listeners to accept it. If you say, "We should spend money on highway construction," all you have done is to assert that such a step should be taken.
